Bonita, CA! That's a little south of downtown San Diego and a few miles north of the Mexico border.

This was my second sit at this house for Maggie the Great Dane, her five chickens and two Siamese kittens, Brody and Bucky. I'd say cats, but they are still not full grown.

Maggie remembered me right away. She's about 130 lbs. now (I think she lost a few since last time) and will lean against me and almost knock me over. We play with toys and if I run through the house, she chases me.

The cats are now allowed out of the master bedroom and Maggie loves them. She nuzzles them with her nose but I'm afraid she might step on one and squash him. Sometimes one or both cats will come downstairs and lay next to her on her bed. They are still not allowed outside downstairs but do go out on the upstairs deck. I'm going to miss Maggie. She is one of my most favorite dogs!

Check out those toes! This is Brody. His brother is Bucky. Brody has two extra toes on both front feet.

This is Bucky. He got sick while I was there. We were at the vet hoping mom and dad would respond to my texts. The vet had no time to see him and I was ready to head to the emergency vet office when mom got in touch. She decided I should just take Bucky home and monitor him.

The next morning it was like nothing ever happened. The following day he had another bad day (not as bad) but was fine the rest of the week. He definitely is smaller and has a smaller tummy than his brother. They are both super cool cats and fun to care for.
